R. Yitzchak Rubinstein (1880-1945)

Yitzchak Rubinstein was born in Datnova, Lithuania in 1880. Around the time of his bar mitzvah, he went to Volozhin to study with R. Raphael Shapiro, and a few years later, he was one of fourteen hand selected students known as the Yad ha-Chazakah (yud daled = 14) who transferred with R. Isser Zalman Meltzer to Slutsk, where a branch of the Slobodka yeshiva was established in 1897.

An eloquent speaker with a charismatic personality, R. Rubinstein was 30 years old, when with close supervision of the Russian Czarist regime, he was selected to become 'Crown Rabbi' of Vilna. Following the debacle with R. Shmuel b. Avigdor (d. 1793) the title av beit din was never granted to rabbis in Vilna. R. Rubinstein's appointment as 'Crown Rabbi' had the support of the eminent R. Chaim Ozer Grodzinski, who continued to lead a large constituency of observant Vilna Jews.

Through the 1920s and 1930s, R. Rubinstein emerged as a powerful voice for religious Zionism. He served as president of Mizrachi in Lithuania, and initiated the establishment of Tahkemoni schools, which functioned in the spirit of religious Zionism. During these two decades, Poland had been granted control of Lithuania, including Vilna. In 1928, the Polish government requested new elections for a Vilna Chief Rabbi, which initiated an unseemly conflict. R. Rubinstein was an ardent religious Zionist, while R. Chaim Ozer Grodzinski was closely aligned with Agudath Israel. While the two renowned rabbonim were on good terms, and worked closely with one another on many social, political and communal issues, supporters of Mizrachi and Agudath Israel in Vilna were at loggerheads with one another. In addition, the Vilna Kehillah, charged with administering the election was controlled by non-observant Jews. When Rabbi Yitzchak Rubinstein won the election as head rabbi, efforts were soon made to reach a compromise. In 1932, the Kehillah and government authorities agreed that both R. Rubinstein and R. Chaim Ozer Grodzinski could serve as Vilna community rabbis.

In August 1939, R. Rubinstein travelled to Geneva to attend the World Zionist Congress. When the war began in September 1939, he immediately returned to Vilna to assist in welfare and rescue activities. Since Vilna was not captured by the Nazis until the summer of 1941, R. Rubinstein managed to flee through Japan to the United States. Upon reaching the United States, he was appointed a Rosh Yeshiva-Maggid Shiur at R. Yitzchak Elchanan Yeshiva (RIETS), where he remained until his death in 1945.

Among those who offered divrei hesped was Rabbi Aharon Burack, a fellow Slobodka yeshiva friend, and Rosh Yeshiva colleague at R. Yitzchak Elchanan Yeshiva. R. Burack's two printed volumes of derashot and halacha, Pirchei Aharon, include a published version of his eulogy for Rav Yitzchak Rubinstein.
